

Kelly Maguire, BPharm, TQAC™
PhD Student, Rhodes University

Kelly Maguire is from the Eastern Cape, South Africa. Born in the poorest province of South Africa, she has developed a strong sense of justice and risk prevention.

She pursued her bachelor's in pharmacy in 2019 for this goal and has since been researching Disaster Risk Management theories to improve her countries healthcare system.

Kelly has been a research assistant for Prof. Roman Tandlich over the years and has assisted with a multitude of cross-disciplinary Disaster Risk Management projects and research. She has lectured part-time and guided students in Disaster Risk Management and Public Health at Rhodes University. She is currently completing her long-term postgraduate research on Refugee Health in Africa. Her studies focus on coping capacity and resilience as she hopes to develop the field of risk assessment and management for humanitarian matters. She wishes to express her desire to learn and improve in Emergency Management.
